

LAURA KITTEL

Laura is currently studying for a doctorate in human rights focusing on happiness at the University of Notre Dame. In this work, she is looking closely at the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (and prior declarations) to interpret how they were intended to be implemented and applied today. In terms of happiness, this means developing one's character and paying attention to how one treats others – becoming a better person. Her work thus also involves virtue ethics. Laura has presented this material at the UN in New York and has presented as guest lecturer at an American College and Murdoch University in Perth.

AVAILABILITY

Most times of the school week, subject to confirmation.

TOPICS

Work and ideals of the UN, formation of the UN, UN and happiness, UN and cultural diversity, UN and human rights